The Chester House IN THE ADIRONDACKS is one of the best conducted in that region. The house is a very comfortable one, not too old-fashioned, but just old-fashioned enough. —N. Y. Mail & Express.

Chestertown IS A GREAT little village with about 500 population, and is surrounded by the lower Adirondacks, which are here thickly covered with pine and hemlock woods. The country round about is a fisherman's paradise, good roads giving easy access to at least a dozen lakes and any number of trout streams, while for those who wish to penetrate the great Adirondack wilderness and rough it for a while, Chestertown is a most convenient starting and outfitting point. Driving parties have their choice of mountain roads, with views of the most attractive scenery in New York State, or of mile upon mile of nearly level roads, through the cool, odorless shade of the pine woods. —Brooklyn Times.

THIS HOTEL, is situated in the beautiful little village of Chestertown, amid the lower spurs of the Adirondacks, twelve hundred feet above tide-water, and within easy reach of all the principal lakes and mountains of that famous range. The roads are excellent; and so diversified is the scenery that a new drive may be taken every day for a month — each one opening upon unexpected vistas of beauty. Indeed, the attractions in the way of pure, exhilarating air, shady walks, charming drives, and fine fishing, combine to make the place a most desirable spot in which to spend the summer, either alone or with one's family.

The Rooms of the Hotel • Which is partly surrounded by a charming maple grove, are large and airy, and so arranged that families can use them in suites if desired. Electric bells and speaking phones on each floor. Baths, etc.

The Table • Is abundantly supplied with all the substantial and delicacies of the season. The CHESTER HOUSE farm, near the house, furnishes fresh products daily. Mountain spring water is piped from a boiling spring at the top of the famous Panther Mountain to the house. In many instances this water has proved very beneficial in cases of indigestion and kidney and liver troubles.

Driving • CHESTERTOWN is noted for its charming drives in every direction. The vicinity is a net-work of beautifully laid out roads, over mountain tops and through wooded valleys. Parties may easily drive to Lake George, dine, enjoy an excursion through the Lake, and return to CHESTER HOUSE in time for supper same day. A well-conducted livery is connected, where first-class turnouts of any description may be had, at reasonable prices.

Five tennis and croquet grounds near the house.

Mail and Telegraph • A DAILY MAIL to and from. Direct telegraphic communication and two trains each way daily add much to the convenience of those guests whose business may call them away at any moment.
